Bennett Jones (BJ) had been an outcast for his entire life. The only person he really cared for died when he was thirteen, and BJ was accused of murdering her. Neglected by his family and shunned and bullied by his peers, somehow BJ made it into adulthood—thanks in no small part to his therapist. Just as he's beginning the final year of his science degree, after which he hopes to become a doctor, he's called into the dean's office and offered a full scholarship for med school. It sounds like a dream come true. There's just one catch: if he fails to honour his end of the agreement, he will lose nothing less than his soul. And that's only one of the strange encounters he's been having this semester. Chased by demons and confronted by mysterious strangers, BJ soon abandons his academic studies in favour of a far different goal: survival. However, he's not alone in his struggle. Aided by his jock roommate, a pretty cheerleader, and other newfound friends—an entirely new concept for BJ—he realizes he has a choice to make: continue to run from his past or accept his true identity destiny and prepare for the battle to come.

About the Author

G. M. Chmilar has lived in Canada her whole life and has always loved folklore and fairy tales, regarding them as a core part of humanity's history. With inspirations from Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Umbrella Academy, Caraval, and Stardust, GM has often wondered what it would be like if the creatures from such stories intersected with our world. Growing up, she would write comics and fiction stories, carrying notebooks between classes and work making up stories and scenarios. When COVID19 created a Canadian lockdown, GM put her spare time to work and had written a story that was true to her heart. Solum, her first novel and a series to follow, is her attempt to put all those little ideas together.
